Doss traveler bluetooth speaker manual pdf format

The DOSS Traveler extremely loud, but doesn't distort. It's a little larger than some speakers, but still fits within the "compact" class. Lighting The feature that stands out the most is the built in LED lights. It also has a MicroSD card input, so you can load MP3s directly off your local storage. Even at high volumes, they're able to push out a ton of crisp sound without any distortion. You also get an AUX input, so you can connect older devices that don't use Bluetooth. Is the same true for their ultra-durable waterproof speaker? First Look The DOSS Traveler packs a lot of punch into a small package. This speaker is definitely geared towards, peppy music. For each hour you've got the light on, you'll have 15 minutes less music time. From parties to camping trips, the LED lights are bright enough to illuminate your entire area. Final Verdict In certain environments, this could be one of the best speakers on the market. Acoustic music and mellow beats are almost overtaken by bass. In an emergency situation, the strobe feature is sure to capture the attention of any passerby. The 48-hour energy-efficient rechargeable flashlight will let you have enough light to record every beautiful moment in your life. Sound Quality The DOSS Traveler is a powerhouse. This allows uncompressed audio to be transmitted in real time, so there is no loss of sound quality. A mesh network of holes provides some accent to the enclosure. It's durability means that you can use it virtually anywhere: by the pool, at the beach, or even on a construction site. It does the job just as well as the next best headlamp, so you'll be able to keep your work site illuminated even when pulling some overtime. The strap is ideal for slinging it over your shoulder, while the small handle is just a simple way to carry it by hand. This means that for each movement of the drivers, you're moving twice as much air. Whether you're hosting a back-yard BBQ or hanging out on the beach, a Bluetooth speaker is a must-have for any summer fun. Even in a large outdoor environment, it was borderline uncomfortable to crank the volume up to 11. From poolside splashes to unpredictable weather, moisture can quickly put an end to your background music. It's peppy, energetic, and full of slamming bass. Please consider sharing: Note: At no extra cost to you, we may earn a commission for purchases using our links. Powered by two 10W high-performance drivers and dual passive subwoofers, the DOSS Traveler can deliver crisp, clear sound at any volume. DOSS rates this speaker for 12 hours of playtime. One of the most promising entrants to this market is the DOSS waterproof Bluetooth speaker. Learn more. Dust will never harm it, and it can survive a splash of 100 liters of water per minute for at least 3 minutes. Note: At no extra cost to you, we may earn a commission for purchases using our links. During indoor use, you're not going to crank the volume all the way up. This is proven with it's astounding IPX67 rating. If you're outdoors with the volume up, you can expect around 10 hours of use. It the fabric is connected with two snap rings, which can be removed in a matter of seconds. If you're in the construction industry, you'll appreciate the quality of light. The aggressive style might not be for everyone, but we think that it's one of the better looking speakers out there. You shouldn't take it scuba diving, but you can rest assured that no accidental liquid exposure is going to damage it. There are a few key reasons that these could be useful. DOSS provides a short handle that measures 11-inches, and a long strap that measures 63 inches. Fortunately, there are many options. If you want something more balanced in a portable package, we'd suggest checking out the DOSS SoundBox Touch. It's heavily biased. Manufacturers are producing a number of speakers that aren't just affordable, but durable. But if you place the speaker behind the scenes, and they'll keep your area illuminated as much as the next best flashlight. The Micro-USB port is used only for charging, and can't be used to connect to external storage devices. The DOSS Traveler is protected from drops, liquid, and environmental damage. But just as it can be a blessing, it can still be a curse if your battery doesn't last as long as you'd expect. The internal components could easily be destroyed by either of these things, so the IPX rating is really testing how well the enclosure isolates the internals. The 2,200mAh rechargeable lithium-ion battery will keep your music going for 12 continuous hours of listening. The fabric handle attaches to two metal mounts. As for the size, this is both a blessing and a curse. On the top, these holes are arranged in a stylish angular pattern to give the speaker it's unique look. The face is fairly plain, as they need a lot of airflow to let the sound through. Big sound requires a big box. The large drivers and massive battery are what allows this speaker to keep the beats pumping all night long. It's pretty clear to us that it's designed for partying. Equipped with a flexible, short handle and a long strap, the DOSS Traveler is easy to take out. Disadvantages There are two main disadvantages to the DOSS Traveler: the size, and the sound. It got an SOS mode to protect your safety. Where does all this power come from? Connectivity This speaker uses Bluetooth 4.1 - the latest standard. That being said, it's not going to be for everyone. The entire enclosure is made from black plastic. The rating is divided into two categories. Anything with a slamming bass-line will sound great. Water comes second, rated from 0 to 7. But this sound isn't going to be for everyone. If you're in to electronic music, rap, or pop, you'll love the way this speaker sounds. It's unique sound signature is best used with specific types of music. But if you're looking for something you can throw in a bag and comfortably haul down to the beach, you might find the bulk of this model a little cumbersome. Design Unlike the sleek and modern design of their previous speakers, DOSS took an aggressive approach with this model. Obviously there are limitations to this, but we feel confident that you'll never find out these limitations except in cases of serious abuse. But Bluetooth speakers allow you to share that music with your friends. Dual 10 watt drivers and passive subwoofers can pump out a lot of sound. In terms of build quality, this thing is rock solid. But it's not true in all circumstances. Rated IPX6 for resisting dust and water, the DOSS Traveler can withstand pressurized jets and waves of water. We already took a look at their SoundBox Touch, and found that it's performance was above average for it's class. Dropping it (or even kicking it!) is unlikely to cause damage. What's the point of having a speaker that can go anywhere, if you're worried about damaging it? It does take a little force to remove them, so you don't have to worry about the handle falling off while in use. However, most purchases overlook one key feature: durability. Dust comes first, rated on a scale of 0 to 6. Durability There are a lot of speakers sold as being durable, but very few have the specifications to back it up. These work like a pseudo subwoofer, adding a ton of bass to a speaker format that's historically tinny. In general, they're useful for late night events. If that's the kind of music you're into, this might not be the best choice for you. For both of these situations, DOSS provides three different brightness settings. The flashlight feature can also reduce your battery life. But when you buy a portable speaker, there is a limit to how big it can be. Battery Life Having the loudest speaker on the block can give you a huge advantage at your next party. Our personal favorite is the Black model, but an army-green option is available if you prefer. That being said, DOSS doesn't skimp on the rest of the frequency range either. When the sun goes down, the dual LED lights will make this speaker the focal point of your next gathering. They are directional, and don't spread the light out evenly like a lantern would. It uses about a quarter of the power of the speaker. We went hands-on to find out. We found it almost uncomfortable beyond 75%. In our tests, this was accurate. Bluetooth headphones allow you to enjoy your music anytime, anywhere. Was this helpful? For that, you can thank the passive radiators. 20 watts might not look like much on paper, but it's more than enough to fill a room. As long as you stay below this level, you'll be able to get the full battery life. Because of the extreme durability, this speaker is also a popular choice on job-sites. IPX is an independent standard that determines how a device is protected from dust and liquid. When the speakers pull back, the radiators push out. There are five lighting modes (low brightness, medium brightness, high brightness, strobe or intermittent flashing, and SOS) by short-pressing the button. Passive radiators look just like speakers, but there is no driver behind them. Many of us have a Bluetooth speaker hanging around our home. Since this is an IPX 66 device, it achieved the highest possible rating in dust protection, and the second highest liquid protection. This means that you'll get 48 hours of light on a single battery. The build quality is just as impressive, but this portable alternative is designed for a very different crowd.
